The project

Nowadays, the labour market is extremely competitive and mobile due to open borders and closer cooperation between the old and new EU member countries. One of the professions that are especially subject to these trends is nursing. The European cooperation puts internationalization pressure on the training institutions in the health sector to increase the quality, mobility and involvement of European vocational training. This makes necessary a better linguistic and intercultural preparation.

The “IENE- Intercultural education of nurses and medical staff in Europe” project aims to create the approaches, methods and tools for the intercultural education of nurses and other medical staff participating in European mobility or working with patients with different cultures and languages in order to facilitate their participation in the European labor market and their integration in different cultural backgrounds.
